Harts Island Road detoured

Students to take the long way

By DENISE MAY
Business Manager

The persistent rumor that Harts Island Road will be closed off is not true, but there will be a temporary detour set up for construction to take place.

In approximately four to six months, the City of Shreveport will begin repaving Kings Highway, including Harts Island Road. Harts Island provides access to LSUS for many students.

How will this affect the students? "It will be a lot of trouble," said student Tim Murphy.

Students on campus use this road for many reasons. Mary Pate, English department, said, "I take that road because I live in Bossier, and it is a lot easier than to go and fight the traffic on Youree Drive." Others use the road because they live in nearby apartments. "It will cause some inconvenience at times," said an employee of the City of Shreveport Engineer Department during a recent telephone conversation. The department hopes the detour will help in some way to maintain the traffic during the construction.

Around 4,450 cars are registered on campus, about 40 percent of the people use this road to enter and exit the campus. With only two existing entrances and exits, this detour is sure to create many more problems.

The people who currently use this exit will most likely be forced to use the main entrance. Thus traffic may become hectic. Students may attempt to develop their own detour and cut straight through the campus to leave faster. Another possible problem is the increase in the number of on-campus and intersection accidents. This could be a hazard especially in the morning when Captain Shreve students are heading one direction and LSUS students are traveling the opposite way.

Apparently this is not the first time Harts Island Road has been detoured. According to Shirley Brown, foreign language professor, "They did the same thing when they were building Bert Kouns and then it was total chaos — now it will be a disaster."

So if you are one of those people who use Harts Island Road, prepare for the change. It will be here before you know it.

Officials disagree on consent decree

By LORI NEJAME
Staff Writer

In 1981 the federal courts ruled that Louisiana maintains a dual system of public higher education. In short, the courts accused Louisiana public colleges of being racially segregated.

A decision handed down by the U.S. District Court in December of 1987 found the state's higher education system still guilty of segregation.

"It's regrettable that the system remains segregated," said Dr. Robert H. Smith, chancellor of Southern University in Shreveport. Southern is one among the local colleges involved in the suit.

"As of this fall, Southern's white enrollment has increased more than 100 percent," said Chancellor Smith. "I'm sure it is the highest increase you'd find in Louisiana."

Chancellor Smith said that Southern experienced a $25 tuition increase for the fall. "Southern relies totally on state funds," said Smith. "Southern has not significant private support or support from businesses which puts a strain on the university."

Gov. Buddy Roemer appointed a task force to end the segregation problem. Composed of 22 members, the local group is reviewing plans that all parties can agree upon.

A number of things could result from the task force's efforts. The court indicated that a merger between local universities including LSUS, Southern of Shreveport, Vo-Tech and Bossier Parish Community College will be considered.

"Shreveport definitely needs a community college system," said Dr. Robert H. Rasmussen, assistant to the president of the LSU system. He added that LSUS and Southern University of Shreveport are two different institutions. "I'm not sure merging is a solution."

A big difference between LSUS and Southern of Shreveport is that LSUS is a four-year university. Southern, however, is a two-year junior college.

Dr. Grady Bogue, chancellor of LSUS, feels that community colleges "uniquely American in origin, have opened up a whole new access for students in this country."

Despite the efforts of LSUS and other local colleges to increase other-race enrollments, the courts find "the matter is presently in the same posture it would have been, had not consent decree ever been filed," according to the suit.

According to the suit, in 1981, around 55 percent of black students enrolled at institutions of public higher education in the state were enrolled at predominantly white institutions. In 1987, this figure fell to about 47 percent.

"The mere existence of a school with a student body of predominantly one race is not in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment," according to the suit. This is true if it can be shown that this "condition did not result from international segregation actions on the part of the state."

LSU-BR is the only university in Louisiana which has implemented a selective admissions policy. Any Louisiana citizen who has graduated from high school can attend the Louisiana public college of his choice, regardless of the person's academic qualifications. Since the enactment of the Civil rights Act of 1964, Louisiana has no longer recognized its institutions of higher education as being either for "whites" or "blacks."

Defendants in the suit feel that a racially identifiable dual system is constitutional as long as there is a freedom of choice in a state's public higher education system.

The task force hopes to reach a decision by Nov. 22, 1988. If they (the task force) haven't reached a decision by then, the courts will reach a decision early next year," said Bogue.

"I'd like to see all institutions in the state funded appropriately," said Rasmussen. "The institutions are severely underfunded which causes problems."

Pinkos in S'port

By KEVIN JEROME
Editor

It's wake up time in America: Revolution not elections is the way out of this madness!" These are the words of Carl Dix, the "antiscandidate" who is running for president. Dix is a member of the Revolutionary Communist Party, USA.

In the Oct. 3 edition of the Revolutionary Worker, the communist newspaper, the Cedar Grove riot was spotlighted as a grand show of proletariat revolution. The entire story was extremely slanted and the gist of the article is rioting is the only solution for blacks in Shreveport. The chronology of the riot was wrong and the writer inserted many false statistics as well as false incidents like Ku Klux Klan involvement acting in concert with the police. The article's picture of Shreveport is of a huge plantation system where whites crack the whip over the blacks.

The paper doesn't just attack whites; it also discredits black leaders such as Jesse Jackson. The paper quotes "many" blacks in Cedar Grove that are "disgusted" and "tired" of Jesse Jackson and the inference is that he (Jackson) is a puppet for the white upperclass.

So what's the problem? This is a free country and a person can print and say anything he wants.

The problem is this communist group rushes to the riot scene and hands out leaflets and other material that are subversive. The communists justify the actions of the rioters and encourage the continuation of these violent and destructive demonstrations. Cedar Grove residents (as admitted in the paper) don't know anything about the philosophy of communism. But, they were responsive to the rhetoric on violence and "taking what you want."

Personally, I feel the majority of Cedar Grove residents have too much sense and patriotism to allow themselves to be mesmerized by these disgruntled rabble-rousers. This conviction doesn't deny the fact that the communists are in Shreveport and recruiting individuals that have lost their focus.

Hopefully, the city leaders will formulate a sound strategy to alleviate the problems in the black community. So in the future, blacks and whites alike won't turn to an organization that declares, "We don't want our fair share. . . We want to tear the whole system down."

Reading isn't believing

By MARTHA BARKLEY
Editorial Assistant

Believe half of what you hear and all of what you see. OR is it believe half of what you see and none of what you hear.

Either way the message is obvious: seeing is not believing and writing does not mean in stone.

Serving on the ALMAGEST staff has taught me two things: if you want something done, do it (it usually takes only a phone call). The mere fact that a story is reported by the media does not mean it is the whole truth.

The first moral is easy to understand. But it is the second one that surprised me so.

Recently, the ALMAGEST received somewhat of a media blitz. The Times, the Shreveport

Journal and KTBS TV-station saw fit to interview and/or quote ALMAGEST Editor Kevin Jerome. Only a small portion of what transpired during these interviews was reported. (Unfortunately, all three factions of the media decided to use the same quote).

These stories barely scratched the surface of what Jerome had to say and they were not the gist of the interview. Laypeople within the community now have a distorted perception of Jerome's comments.

Granted, time is a factor. Who can possibly run an hour interview in a 30 minute newscast? Keeping that in mind, the tidbits of information reported must encompass the entire idea, not just parts of the whole.

As an avid news nut, I watch and read much of what is reported. Until lately, I did so with blind faith. No longer do I accept as true what is told to me.

Please do not misunderstand my point. I did not stop watching or reading. In fact, this led me to watch and read more. I am not cynical, just skeptical.

The media are wonderful institutions. They are the backbone of democracy. But like so many other wonderful institutions, they have their shortcomings.

So the next time you read a news story, don't take it at face value. Read what others have to say. There maybe more to it than meets the eye.

Career center lists jobs

By Andrea Logan
Contributing Writer

Jobs are available for students willing to work. There are several approaches a student can take to find the right job. One of the best resources for career information is people.

Bill Stowe, director of placement and planning at LSUS, says new job openings are listed through the career center daily. According to Stowe, many of the available jobs are part-time. range from general office workers to restaurant help. "Most of these jobs pay anywhere from minimum wage to $7 an hour, depending on the type of work," Stowe said.

"The major quality that employers are looking for is someone with good communication skills. It doesn't matter whether the person is babysitting or working full-time for a major company, communication skills still rank number one," Stowe said.

The career center has many full-time job openings for students near graduation. Stowe said, "Seniors who are planning to graduate in May of '89, should start planning and interviewing with companies now." Stowe advises students to use the career library. It is available to anyone.

One problem Lisa Johnson, assistant manager of Gadzooks in Pierre Bossier Mall, foresees is that "Most people do not want to start at the low end of the ladder and work their way up. Instead they complain about the lack of available jobs." Johnson, a junior public relations major, said in the past she had viewed the job openings in the career center and there were many to choose from.

Mary Noplis, placement counselor with Career Adventures employment agency, said, "Sales positions are usually open to any major. And in this area, there are quite a few sales jobs available." Noplis said she places mostly accounting, marketing and science majors.

The career center offers student workshops on interviewing, resume writing and career planning. Stowe stresses four areas: prepare, know what the company has to offer, dress the part, and follow up after interviewing.

The career center is located on the second floor of the administration building, room 230. The job listings are posted outside of the career center office and on the first floor in Bronson Hall. In order to find out more about these openings, students should contact the career center.

Turning The Corner

We're heeere...

By TOM EYTON-JONES
Columnist

An article passed me recently that presented some very interesting information. According to Michael W. Hirschorn, writing in The Chronicle of Higher Education (March 30, 1988), students over 25 years old make up 45 percent of campus enrollment nationwide.

This means there are roughly six million adult students, both undergraduate and graduate, who qualify as nontraditional students. Using the College Board Report, "How Americans in Transition Study for College Credit," Hirschorn went on to explore the academic community's reaction to this proliferation of older students.

The radical change in the makeup of the average student body has caused problems across the country which many universities have yet to deal with. Cynthia S. Johnson, Columbia University's Teacher's College, said: "Our adults are in transition and in increased need of life-span learning. Our institutions have not responded."

Just what does "not responded" mean? Most of the complaints were about lack of sympathy from university administrators and professors over the everyday situations that the nontraditional students had to deal with. These problems affect class attendance and test performance.

For example, over 60 percent of the nontraditional student pool are women. Many of their problems include: lack of family support, inadequate child care facilities, family emergencies, and managing their homes along with studying for school.

Some women have had marriages collapse because of their desire to attend school. Others have seen mates leave after the have graduated and secured a good-paying job.

Many complaints center around degree requirements which (except for military experience) fail to allow any credit or acknowledgement of life experiences that could more than qualify them for advanced level courses. Instead, nontrads are forced to take courses that have been designed strictly with incoming high school graduates in mind.

The recent high school graduates want to know "how" while the nontrads want to know "why." This leads to frustration in the classroom.

Professor Marica Yudkin of Smith College wrote of a classroom "revolt" by older students in the October 1987 issue of Ms. magazine. Her

"God Squad" calls LSUS home...

By Rich Pence
Contributing Writer

The "God Squad" has invaded LSUS. The name alone gives the impression of an army moving in to fight. That is exactly what they are.

The group consists of Christians from various denominational backgrounds with one common goal; to tell Shreveport about their love of God and what God has done in their lives. They will converse with anyone to share their faith. Reactions received are mixed.

"We just kind of ignore them," said Drew, a junior at LSUS. This was a common reaction. Others asked why people would force their views on them and still say they love them. "People are trying to have a good time," said Stewart, a recent graduate of Centenary College. "Nobody wants to be made to feel bad about themselves."

The group says that they are not talking with people to condemn them or to make anyone feel bad. However, they will not handle the word of God dishonestly; they will state the truth openly and candidly. The group has committed itself to God and a holy lifestyle and says that is what weighs heavy on man's conscience.

Most people form their own religion. Those sharing their faith know this, but still ask the question, "Where has religion and tradition gotten anyone?"

"Religion is how man has tried to get to God," says Keith a member of the group and graduate of Oral Roberts University. "The world wants to categorize everything and God is so limitless. We want to categorize and say what's religious, what's political and what's economical, but yet God is interested in each of these areas."

The God Squad stress a personal relationship with God through Jesus Christ. "There is such a difference between the old religion and a true relationship with God," says Leanne, a Tech graduate living and working in Shreveport. "People don't realize that because of the veil of religion which can only be removed when people repent and see Jesus as Lord."

Keith adds, "People are looking for a thrill. I'm not talking about a thrill, but a joy. Joy lasts. Thrills are momentary."

The God Squaders have been ignored, laughed at, cussed out and even physically abused, but they continue to share their testimonies. If you ask them why, they'll tell you "What we preach is not ourselves, but Jesus Christ as Lord, and ourselves merely as your servants for Jesus' sake."

Alumnae at LSU-BR

Pilot goes tiger

By KEN KURIGER
Sports Editor

There might not be inter-collegiate athletics here at LSUS, but that has no bearing on those who aspire to enter a sports-oriented field after graduating.

Take Kent Lowe. The former Shreveporter, and LSUS alumnus used his public relations degree to enter the sports marketing field, a career in which he still gets to be a fan. And all indications are, he's loving every day of it.

Lowe, 24, began his post-college work at Louisiana Downs, where he served as publicity director for a year. The experience of promoting the Downs and dealing with the local media provided Lowe with essentials that led to his present position—assistant sports information director at LSU-Baton Rouge. For Lowe, that's when the fun started.

"As soon as I got down here in August, I knew I'd enjoy this job. Even the beginning, when I basically did all kinds of things, was interesting. And now that it's settled down, it seems like I'm a big part of the operation."

What Lowe calls "settling down" is his close work with the enthusiastic wonder, Dale Brown. Lowe's responsibilities include preparing and distributing media guides and developing promotional posters. However, don't be fooled by his advertising acumen—deep down, Lowe's allegiance to Tiger basketball is reverential. But Kent, isn't the '88-89 season gonna be a torture chamber for Brown's Bengals?

"To tell you the truth, I'm excited about this year. This is the type of team that Dale can really get the most out of."

I thought I'd heard the last of the freaky, mystical powers of Brown. And when the revenue-reaping schedule is coupled with the pre-season Prop. 48 casualties, I personally, can only feel remorse for the Tigers. Yet, Lowe assured me the LSU eleven will do just fine.

"When you look at the freshmen remain eager to practice.

"It's great to see Stanley and the others staying motivated. Often times, players forced to sit out just give basketball up for a year. Not these guys. They scrap together pick-up games just about every night." Yeah, but that doesn't solve the size problem in the middle, does it?

"Well, with Ricky Blanton, you've got a guy who can play any of the three front-line positions," noted Lowe. "And with Chris Jackson and Vernell schedule, you know it's gonna be a great year," he said. "We even start early against the Olympic silver medalists." LSU will face Yugoslavia on Nov. 20 at Assembly Center.

Their non-conference schedule is dotted with powers, including UNLV at home and Georgetown at the Superdome. Both those games will be televised nationally.

With Jose Vargas gone and playing in Italy, the Tigers appear to be thin-coated in the paint. Originally, the void in the pivot was to be filled by Stanley Roberts, South Carolina's prep player of the year in '87-88. Unfortunately, the 6-11, 265-pound center fell victim to the now infamous Proposition 48 syndrome. Lowe said that, despite the frustration of not being part of the team, all the ineligible

Singletary in the backcourt, the big guys will get the ball in good spots."

Jackson, from Gulfport, was Mr. Basketball in Mississippi last year, and if he'd played in another state, it's likely that Natchez's Singletary would have been. If not for Chris Jackson, the Tigers may have employed a 6-8 point-guard, according to Coach Brown.

"We were getting ready to stick Blanton back there," said Brown. That would've been interesting, but with Jackson being tabbed as a pre-season All-SEC guard by several publications, we'll probably never see Blanton orchestrating the team.

Another positive Brown and Lowe referred to is the development of power-forward Wayne Sims. After red-shirting as a freshman, Sims played last year under the guise of a young Williams, our strength coach, to Charles Barkley. That is, his jersey didn't camouflage his round-mound heft.

"You'll see a different Wayne Sims this year," said Lowe. "He's worked hard with Milton many guys will enjoy running in to him." It's reported that the 6-8 Sims has trimmed down to a svelte 244.

The conference was presented Oct. 3-5 by the University of South Carolina in cooperation with the University of Missouri-Kansas

We're Heeere...

(Continued From Page 4) students were complaining about lackadaisical organization and encouragement by the professor to "think freely." They desired specific guidance; they already knew how to think. The nontrads also wanted to relate their life experiences to what they were learning and that required direction, which Yudkin

City...

Among conference goals was the presentation of current information, research findings, and innovative ideas to help institutions increase their success in recruiting, retaining, and educating minority students.

A member of the LSUS psychology faculty since 1973, was not giving. Curiosity about the older students led Yudkin to discover many of the grievances above mentioned.

Recently a student asked me why involvement by nontraditional students in student activities was so scanty. Most of those activities were designed for the younger students. There is also the "living" problems:

Benefield was an NDEA Fellow from 1970-73 and an instructor of psychology at Louisiana Tech from 1968-70.

He holds the B.A. (1966) from Louisiana Tech; the M.A. (1968) from New Mexico State University; and the Ph.D. (1973) from Southern Illinois University.

preparing meals, attending PTA meetings, paying bills, AND convincing the spouse we are doing something worthwhile. On the nontraditional students' list of priorities learning is first followed by jobs, homes, and families. This doesn't leave time for much else. As you can see above, we have enough problems already.
